SPRING 1994

Campus NEWS

Graduate wins election

Robert Nordlander, a 1991 BJU graduate, defeated a three-time incumbent to win the office of Southeast Ward Alderman of Winston-Salem, NC. Nordlander now has the "swing" vote for all major issues in Winston-Salem. According to an editorial in the November 4 Winston-Salem Journal, a primary factor in his victory was due "to his strong religious convictions and his Bob Jones University degree." Nordlander works for a CPA firm owned by his father, a 1974 BJU graduate.

Graduate honored by Ohio State University

Dr. George F. Martin, a 1960 BJU graduate, was named Professor of the Year by the Ohio State University Class of 1993. Presently, he is the Director of the Medical and Graduate Neuroscience course and is very active in research and writing projects. This honor is just one of many research and teaching awards Dr. Martin has received during his 24 years at Ohio State.

Graduate wins national voice award

Last spring, Colin Richards, a 1993 graduate, was the unanimous first place winner of the National Federation of Music Clubs Hazel Heffner Becchia Voice Award. This $1500 award is given biennially to a man or woman voice student between the ages of 18 and 26. Colin won the competition at the state and district levels before going on to win on the national level. Colin is the minister of music at Harvester Baptist Church in Columbia, Maryland.

A Lifetime of Choices

Alison Cook was a senior in high school when her Bible teacher gave her a challenge: "Write down your philosophy of life." She wrote two sentences: "I want to be more like Christ everyday. I want to help other people." God used that Bible class to change the direction of her entire life.

Alison comes from a Christian home in Stone Mountain, GA. She remembers talking to her kindergarten teacher about salvation and making a decision at home to accept Christ. But for years, she doubted her salvation because she couldn't remember the date she got saved. Then came that senior Bible class.

"I never knew that you could be under conviction in Bible class!" Alison remembers. "We talked about the tests of knowing you're a Christian and how to live totally without doubt. You have to believe in the finished work of Christ. That's what I've done, and now I'm completely sure I'm saved."

Coming to BJU was practically a given in Alison's case–her brother and sister were both graduates. "We always talked about how I'd come to BJU one day, and I knew I probably would, but I got a bad attitude for a while–I wanted to make my own decision, be my own person.

"Then our Bible teacher told us to talk to our parents about such a big decision and trust them for direction. We couldn't see the whole picture like they could." Alison followed that advice and now she's in the middle of the BJU picture, with no regrets.

Choosing a major was also a big decision for Alison. And once again, the Bible class had a part in the choice. "We had to write down how our philosophy would influence choices we made in church, school and career. While I was writing this, I had doubts for the first time about my intended major. I realized that my first choice of career didn't really fit with my purpose statement." Then Alison found out her dad had been praying for six months that the Lord would work in her heart about her major.

Alison threw out her old plans, but had no idea what she would put in their place. Several incidents during her senior year helped settle it. One summer Alison had stayed each day with an elderly lady whose legs were both amputated. "When I first started, I thought, 'I am not the kind who can handle stuff like this.' But we developed quite a relationship."

Alison realized just how much of a relationship when she returned from her senior trip and found out the lady had passed away. At the same time, her own grandmother went into the hospital, and Alison was assigned the philosophy paper in Bible class. "All of it seemed to pile together and say, 'Alison, you've got to find a major where you can help people.' "

She had a definite process for this–she just started going through the whole list of majors in the BJU catalog. "I know I looked at special education once, but I saw the three semesters of science, and I have a terrible fear of science." Alison skipped past special education, but kept coming back to it. "I finally told the Lord, 'I feel like this is where you're leading me; so, if you want me in special ed, you're just going to have to help me through science.' "

Alison Cook is now a junior special education major at BJU, and she's doing fine–busy taking advantage of the many opportunities at BJU. She has traveled on several week-ends to work with physically and mentally challenged young people. "One of the first times I went, I was responsible for a very big boy, and I had so many problems. But the next day we took them to an amusement park and had so much fun! I get there with them, and I'm so excited. It's easy to be happy about everything they do."

Working in the Admissions office and as a campus tour guide helps Alison pay for her education. She also lives on Academy Hall in the dormitory, helping these students with some of the same problems she faced as a highschooler.

Through the direction of a godly teacher and her parents, Alison has made wise choices. And by her enthusiasm, anyone could tell she has found the joy of the Lord by following godly advice. ■

Story's STORY

"While I was at BJU, I was nearly the invisible student. I was never the campus leader, never the prayer captain, never the society leader. On the other hand, I never got into trouble either. The only significant thing that I ever did was to call the fire department when a dorm caught on fire in 1972. Yet BJU shaped my character into what God would have me to be. The world is full of unknown and unrecognized BJU graduates who have faithfully followed God's direction and made their mark on eternity."

John Story is one of those grads–never heard of in college, but showing up now with twenty years of consistent testimony and service. He's lived all over the USA. He's worked all kinds of jobs. And he's got all kinds of stories to tell.

During John's senior year in a public high school, he thought he wanted to be a preacher. "I had qualified for a state scholarship based on my SAT scores," he says. But God directed John's plans toward college at BJU instead. Following the advice of a pastor and his mother, John visited the campus at Thanksgiving, 1968 and, as he says, "was sold." After his first semester, John was convinced that God had used his feelings about the pastorate simply to get him to BJU, and he changed his major from Bible to math.

His 1973 degree in math (with a minor in physics) has definitely served him well. John earned his master's in math from Clemson University in December of 1974 and then headed for the military. In 1975 he received a direct commission to teach math, physics and thermodynamics at the U.S. Navy's Nuclear Power School. After four years, he was released from active duty and entered the Naval Reserve.

Since that release he was recalled to active duty for one year as the Deputy Chief of Staff for Automatic Data Processing, for Commander, Naval Surface Reserve Force in New Orleans. While back in the service, John used his talent on the piano to assist a small Baptist church. He should soon retire as Lieutenant Commander in the Naval Reserve.

Aside from his military career, John has worked for Texas Instruments, evaluating computer system performance and working in the computer capacity planning field. In 1984 John also qualified for membership in Mensa, a worldwide organization for individuals scoring in the top 2% of certain standardized tests.

While working for TI in Lewisville, TX, John met Denise, a Christian young lady working in the area. John is convinced that the Lord led him to Lewisville for the sole purpose of meeting his wife. The Storys have two children–Diane Joy, 7, and David Joseph, 6.

John moved to another large computer software company in Texas before coming to Boeing Computer Services (BCS) in Richland, WA, in 1990. His job at BCS uses his past experience from the computer capacity planning work. In May 1991, John's scores on several professional exams from the Institute for Certification of Computer Professionals qualified him as a Certified Data Processor.

Now, twenty years after his graduation, John is certain that the Lord had a definite reason for bringing him to Washington. "It was here that the Lord showed me that I had the desire and ability to preach," he says. "I began by teaching the adult Sunday School class in our church. And during the summer of 1991, I served as the interim pastor of a small church in the northern farming country."

John's story does include a recent time of combined trial and blessing. In September 1991, he injured his back during Naval Reserve training. The resulting surgery in March 1992 was followed by a lengthy period of rest. During this time, John felt burdened to write a book, now nearly complete, on church music.

John Story is not a profound theologian or a renowned evangelist–but he is a well-trained professional, consistently serving the Lord.

"If God would have you to enter full-time Christian work, there is no better place than BJU to go to receive a grounding in the Word of God. If God would have you go into some professional field, there is no better place to get the educational foundation and character required for the professions. If God would have you go into a trade, there is no better place to get the technical skills. The course of my entire life has been shaped for service to God by my experience at BJU." ■

Das Laboratorium

"Sprechen Sie Deutsch?" "Parlez-vous Français?" In today's flooded job market and expanding global economy, more and more companies are looking for employees who can communicate in a foreign language.

That's one reason why over 25 percent of the majors at BJU require at least four semesters of German, Spanish, Russian, or French. One of the biggest helps to these students is a room tucked in the corner of the Alumni Building's second floor–the language lab.

Thinking back to language lab days in high school may conjure up memories of pinching headphones, dark, depressing booths, and voices droning in a perplexing jumble of words. However, the atmosphere in BJU's newly remodeled lab is vastly different, and all of the students who spend ninety minutes of listening and drilling in the lab each week are very thankful for that difference.

Originally built in 1963, the lab was last renovated in 1983. The reel-to-reel machines were out-of-date and hard to use, and the original wiring needed to be replaced. The University had planned to remodel the lab in the next few years, but the wiring needed immediate attention. The decision was made to move up the plans and remodel the lab along with the summer renovation of the Alumni Building's second floor.

In place of the former equipment are computerized consoles, refinished booths with new desktops and glass panels, new wiring, and light, comfortable headphones. "The entire atmosphere of the lab is more cheerful," says Mrs. Edith Long, German professor and head of the language lab.

The language department converted every reel-to-reel tape to cassette tapes which are used on the desk consoles. And the cassette players are operated by the top-of-the-line Sony LLC 9000 system. One of the most practical features of this system is a "repeat" button which repeats one phrase over and over so the student can practice it without having to rewind and search for the correct cue every time. The "drill" feature automatically records and plays back the student's voice on a separate track so he can evaluate his pronunciation.

This new system also gives the University the opportunity to expand into computer and video education, in addition to the textbook and tape program curriculum presently used. Dr. Bruce Byers, chairman of the Modern Language Department, says, "BJU's lab is up to par with other universities' modern language labs."

Spending time in the language lab reinforces the speech patterns of the language and allows the student additional practice in what he has heard in the classroom. While in the lab, students can also take advantage of the resource library located there and work through several tutorial programs on an Apple computer.

A unique advantage of the language lab is the way it helps the BJU summer mission teams that travel to Quebec, France, Germany, Russia, and Mexico. Because team members have practiced their pronunciation in the lab, they are able to communicate the Gospel more clearly and effectively to the nationals. ■

TEAM

At BJU every academic major falls into one of six academic categories (or schools). Acting as dean of a school involves supervising faculty members and students, overseeing the academic programs of various majors, teaching several courses, working with prospective students, and being responsible for many miscellaneous programs and projects. It is an immense job, yet our deans do it well.

Dr. James Deuink,
School of Education

B.S. - Social Studies Education - Edinboro University
M.Ed. - Educational Administration and Supervision - West Georgia University
Ed.D. - Educational Administration and Supervision - University of Georgia post-doctoral work in School Psychology - Clemson University

Dr. Deuink was principal of Stone Mountain Christian School near Atlanta, Georgia for ten years. He first came to BJU as assistant registrar in 1980 and served as registrar from 1981-1990 when he became the dean of the School of Education. Dr. Deuink has served on education boards and committees, written books and articles for Christian education publications, and spoken regularly at Christian school conventions.

Dr. Deuink has visited Christian schools in Alaska, Canada, Guam, and Hawaii and will travel to Korea, Guam, and the Marshall Islands this spring. He has also traveled to Alaska and Maine to enjoy a part of his life that has nothing to do with education–hunting whitetail deer, wild boar, and black bear.

Dr. Dwight Gustafson,
School of Fine Arts

B.A. - Voice - Bob Jones University
M.A. - Church Music - Bob Jones University
Ph.D. - Composition - Florida State University

This marks Dr. Dwight Gustafson's 40th year as dean of the School of Fine Arts, a position he's held longer than any other BJU dean. After working as a BJU dorm supervisor while finishing his master's degree, he assumed the position of dean.

Dr. Gustafson is responsible for the artistic aspects of all Classic Players, Opera Association and vespers productions, and all academic work in the art, music, speech, and cinema divisions. Though he's the conductor of the University Orchestra and teacher of three music courses, he still finds time to compose choral and instrumental pieces and travel.

Mr. Ross Robinson,
School of Applied Studies

B.S. - Accounting - Bob Jones University
M.A. - Pastoral Studies - Bob Jones University

This youngest and most recent member of the administration worked as an auditor for the accounting firm of Peat, Marwick and Main before joining the University staff in 1987. He served as a dormitory supervisor for two years and then as the Director of Student Organizations for the next two years.

Since becoming dean in 1991, Mr. Robinson has continued to supervise two scholarship programs for foreign students–the W.O.R.L.D. Fund and the Timothy Program. He, his wife, Janiece, their daughter, Claire, and newborn son, Brock, spend the summers at the WILDS, a Christian camp in North Carolina.

Dr. Guenter Salter,
College of Arts and Science

B.A. - German - Wayne State University
M.A. - German and English - Wayne State University
M.A. - Comparative Literature - Vanderbilt University
Ph.D. - Literature and Philosophy - Vanderbilt University

Dr. Guenter Salter grew up in Germany, became a soldier in the German Army at age fifteen, and spent his sixteenth and seventeenth years as a prisoner of war. After he immigrated to the United States in 1951, he joined the U.S. Army and served for two years in the Military Police in Japan.

Dr. Salter joined Bob Jones University in January, 1967, as a member of the Modern Language faculty. In September of the same year he was named chairman of the Modern Language department. In 1971, one year after completing his doctorate, Dr. Salter was named the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences. Somehow he still finds the time to develop his varied interests in reading, gardening, carpentry, coin collecting, hiking, and camping.

Dr. Robert Taylor,
School of Business Administration

B.S. - Math - Bob Jones University
M.A. - Math - Penn State University
Ph.D. - Math - Clemson University
M.B.A. - University of South Carolina

After his graduation in 1962, Dr. Taylor joined the BJU Math faculty, eventually becoming chairman of the Mathematical Sciences division. Since 1983 he has served as the dean of the School of Business Administration, teaching several math courses and serving on several educational and governmental boards and committees over the past 15 years.

Dr. Taylor's roles in the activities of the S.C. Republican Party have included both local and state offices and national delegate responsibilities. He fills in his extra time hunting, fishing, and officiating campus and local games.

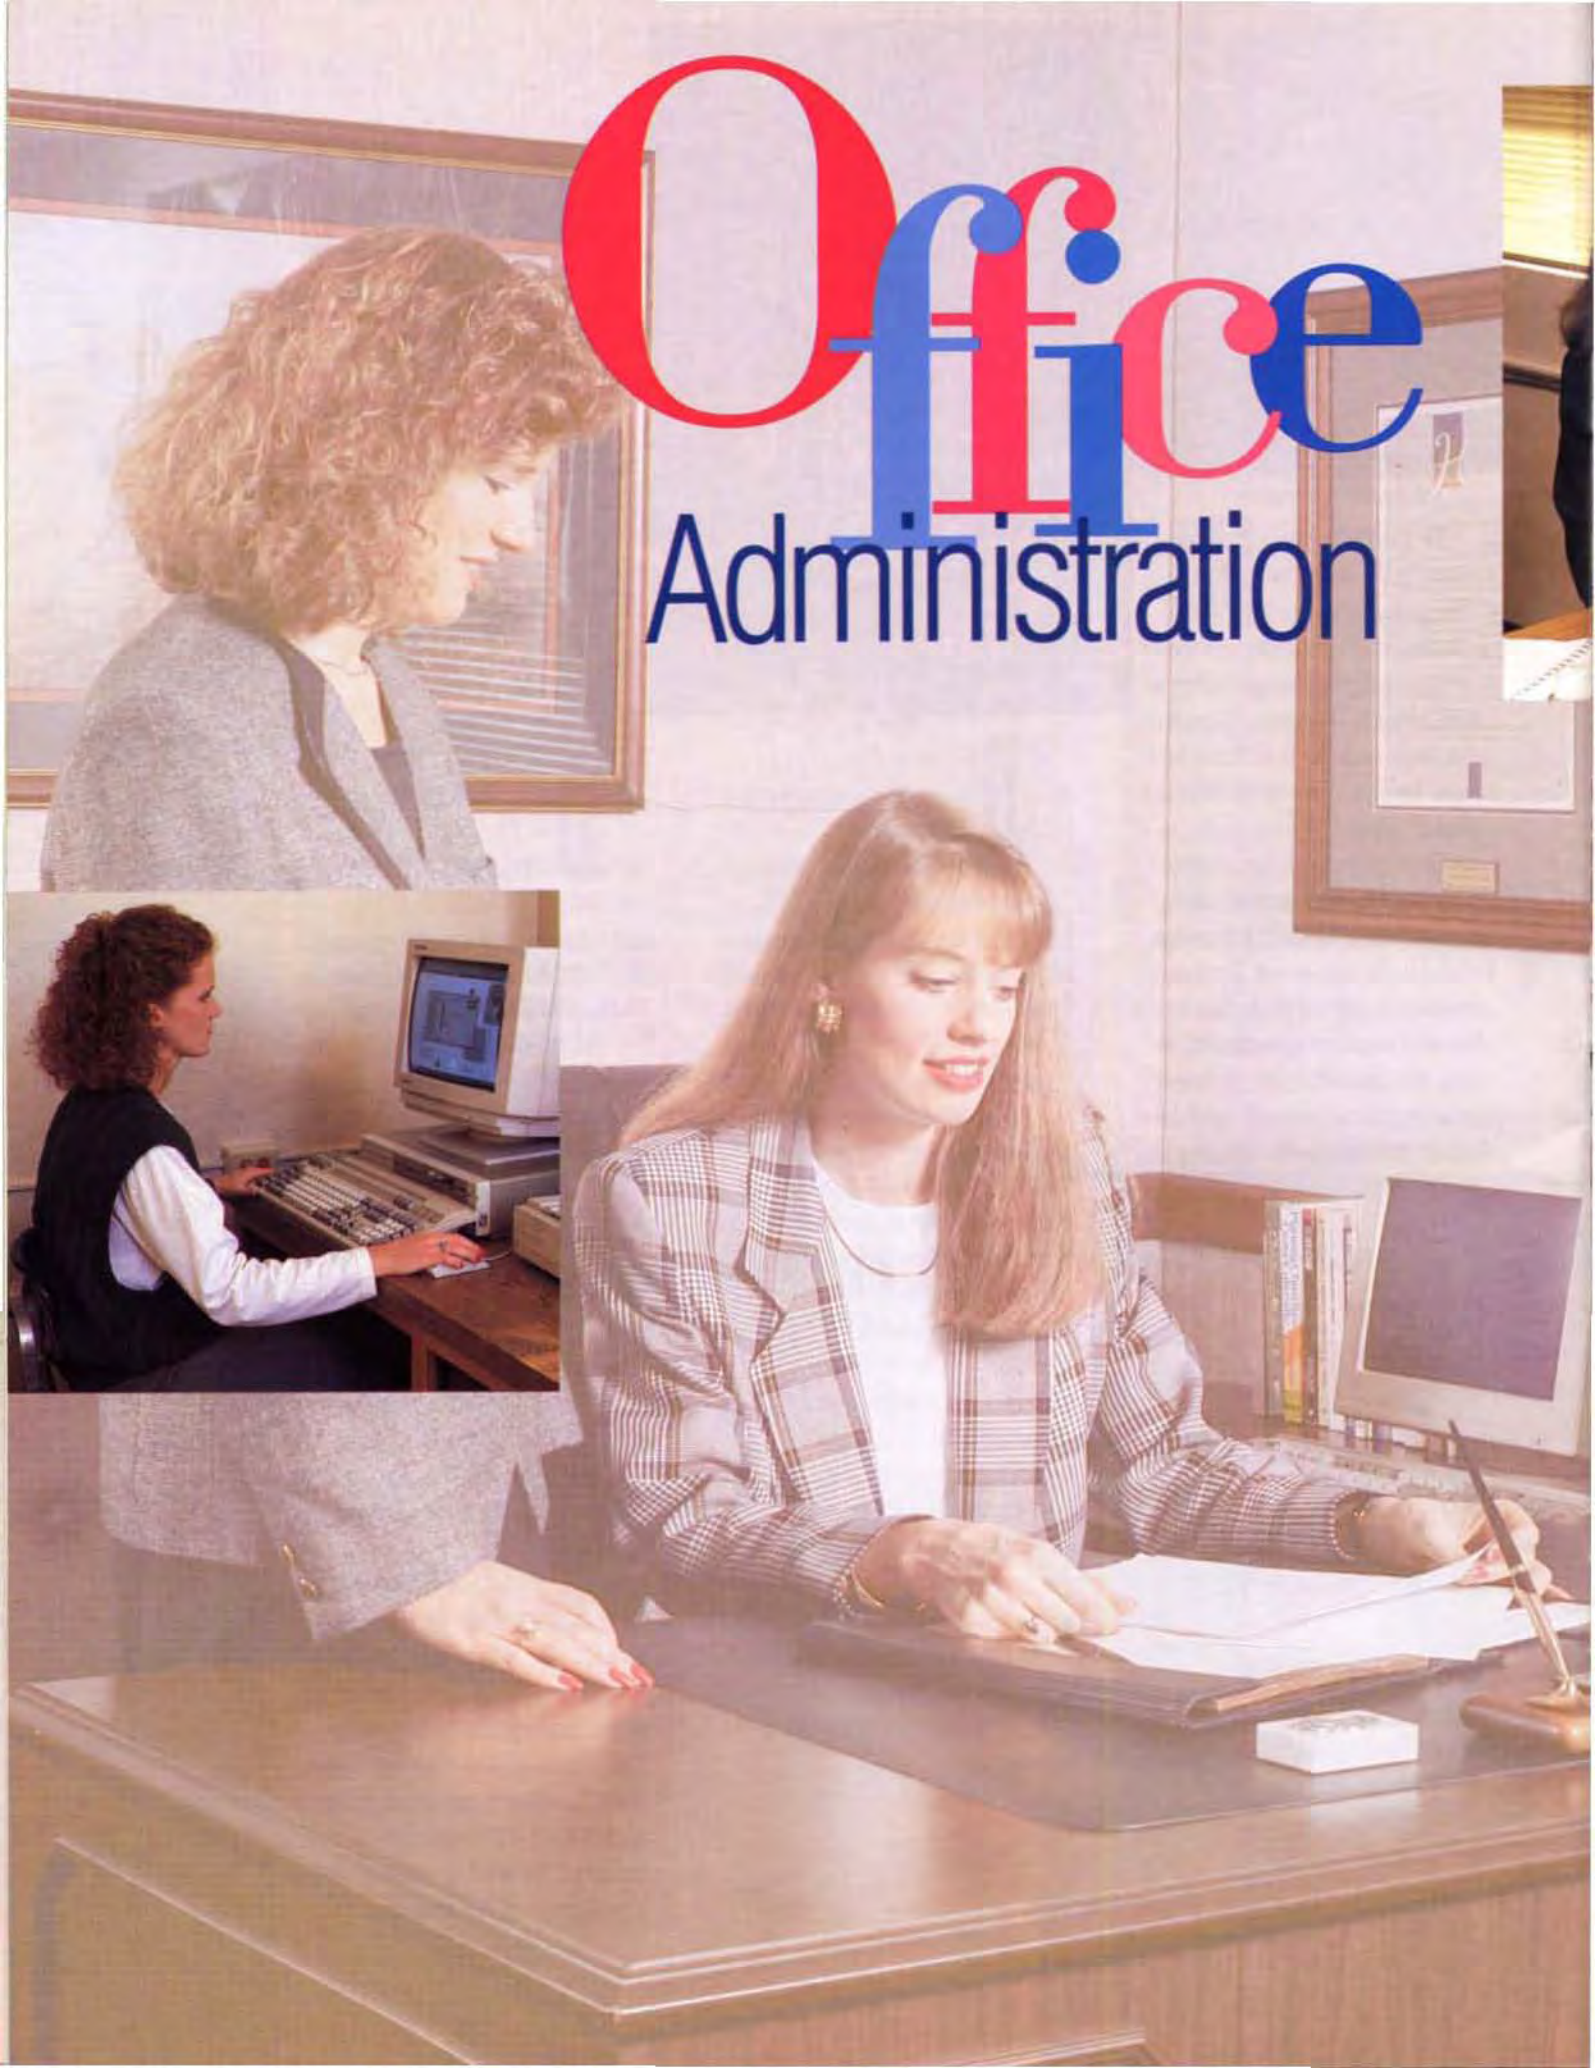
Dr. Thurman Wisdom,
School of Religion

B.A. - Bible - Bob Jones University
M.A. - Bible - Bob Jones University
Ph.D. - Old Testament Interpretation - Bob Jones University

After spending four years in the Air Force, Dr. Wisdom came to BJU. Upon finishing his first degree, he became a graduate assistant and then taught Bible in the Institute of Christian Service (now part of the School of Applied Studies). He was appointed dean of the School of Religion in 1978. Although he doesn't have any exotic hobbies, Dr. Wisdom enjoys reading, playing chess and studying ancient history.

A former BJU teacher likes to tell this story about Dr. Wisdom and his wife, Mary, who has worked in the BJU office for many years. During her student days, Mrs. Wisdom prayed in her Bible class, "Lord, give me wisdom." It wasn't until the couple began to date that the teacher realized the significance of her prayers.

Office Administration



It would be an understatement to say that office work has changed in the last few decades. And keeping right up with this innovative pace is BJU's office administration program–giving would-be office employees the skills needed to succeed in today's market.

"BJU has offered an office administration major since the 1940s," says Dr. Laura Glenn, chairman of the department. But the technology these students learn is far from obsolete. "While it was a secretarial major, we're now aiming more toward office management–administrative positions. With the skills these students graduate with, they can still get an entry-level office job. But most of them are headed for higher positions."

Because of this emphasis, courses in the major cover a variety of current areas: word processing/computer skills, office management, records and database management, alphahand, office systems, desktop publishing, accounting, legal and medical office procedures and business law. An office practicum concludes the senior year where students complete their resumes and participate in mock interviews.

"Most of all, we want the students to learn how to learn," says Dr. Glenn. "Instead of just showing them technical procedures, we also try to teach them how to write, how to listen, and how to pull together information into a whole that they can think through and present."

Case in point: a computer purchase project in the office systems course. "The students are given a certain amount of money to 'spend' on a computer," Dr. Glenn says. "Then they're responsible to do research to find which computer is the best buy for that amount. They have to turn in a report on their choice that is convincing enough to make me believe that it's a good buy and that it will meet my 'company's' needs."

Desktop publishing is a popular office administration course and one that has definitely changed over the years. Secretaries formerly used IBM Selectrics, correction fluid and scotch tape to create a document. This course has students using modern technology–PCs running Aldus Pagemaker, scanners and laser printers–to publish brochures, newsletters, and advertising material.

"If a secretary knows desktop publishing, the company won't have to send off as many jobs and can do more in-house to cut costs," says Cathy Tiner, office administration senior. "I think the variety of that kind of work makes it fun. You aren't just typing. You get to use some creativity."

Job security definitely scores as a big plus for this major, and because of that, many other students choose office adminstration as a minor. "It's a common reason for a minor–to make sure they can get a job if something doesn't work out with their major," Dr. Glenn says. "A lot of students realize the good job market that opens with office administration."

Whether a major or a minor, a BJU graduate with office skills can find employment–as long as there are offices, there will be office positions. "We often get calls here from employers looking for graduates or students with time off during the day," she says.

"I do not know of any graduates who have not been able to find a job. Of course, we don't advise students to expect management positions on their first job. They need to prove themselves and show that they can get along with people."

At BJU, students do learn the people skills necessary to quickly climb the ladder to administrative responsibilities. "An office employee can have incredible technical skills, but lousy character. We really try and focus on skills that are important–interpersonal relations, pride in work, dependability, being on time, and honesty."

With this combined technical and social preparation, office administration majors are headed for success. ■

THE PRESIDENT'S CORNER

Author Quentin Schultze made the following apt observations about our generation.

> There is a tremendous religious ignorance in the United States. There are a lot of people who believe in God, but they have a poor understanding of doctrine in the Bible. We have a religious culture, but a high degree of religious ignorance…Americans love personalities, whether they are entertainers, sports figures, news anchors, or preachers…People are less interested in ideas than they are in people.

In my estimation, he could not have summarized the present deficiencies of the church more aptly. Bob Jones University's mission in the lives of its students is to instill understanding of the doctrines of the Bible. We're here to train young people to be more than cultural Christians and to make them Biblically literate and obedient.

If knowledge is power, then Biblical knowledge is ultimate power, because the Bible is ultimate Truth. Biblical obedience gives power with God and power in living before others for God.

A Christian lady wrote a letter chiding me years ago for something I had written. In my reply to her I used the Scripture to explain why my position was right, and I carefully explained from the Scripture God's perspective on the issue. In her reply, this Biblically illiterate woman said, "Don't confuse me with doctrine." She didn't understand that without doctrine, there was no hope for her to be anything except confused. The Psalmist said, "Therefore I esteem all thy precepts concerning all things to be right; and I hate every false way" (Psalm 119:128). How many times in chapel we tell the students that if we preach anything contrary to the Scripture, they should believe the Bible, not us. As long as we have a copy of the Bible, there is no excuse for religious ignorance. Each individual Christian is responsible not for his pastor's beliefs or convictions, but for his own.

When students graduate, we want them to know what they believe and why, and we want it to be what the Bible teaches. If they become mere followers of Bob Jones University or of their church or pastor, the first time they are under the influence of other persuasive teaching, they are vulnerable and susceptible to every sort of error. If they've learned during these four years to nail down God's perspective on all things as revealed by the Scripture, they can believe right and live right no matter where they may go, and they will be pleasing the Lord in the process.

Any education for the Christian that excludes the knowledge of God and the mind of God is incomplete and improper education. The Bible, eternal Truth, must become food for hungry Christians again in this country if we are to survive having our spiritual bones picked clean by the vultures of religious deception which abound in Christian television, Christian radio, Christian schools of higher learning, Christian publications, and in pulpits.

How greatly we need men and women in the pews who can distinguish truth from error; who have the Biblical knowledge that produces courage and confidence to walk contrary to the many religious media personalities who would never have made it to the limelight if Christians were Biblically literate and doctrinally grounded.

Surely the days of I Timothy 4:1 are upon us: "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils." The simplest, humblest saint of God is armed and protected against religious leaders like that if he possesses the knowledge of Bible doctrine.

Bob Jones University is dedicated to fidelity to the Scripture and the inculcation of Scripture into the lives of young people. Pastors who love the Bible and preach the Bible rejoice to have Scripturally literate laymen like that in their churches. If Light ever shines again in this nation of spiritual darkness, it will be because of the steadfastness and commitment of Christians like that. The ministry of Bob Jones University in preparing such Christians has become more strategic than ever, more necessary for Christian young people, more dependent upon the prayers of God's saints. ■

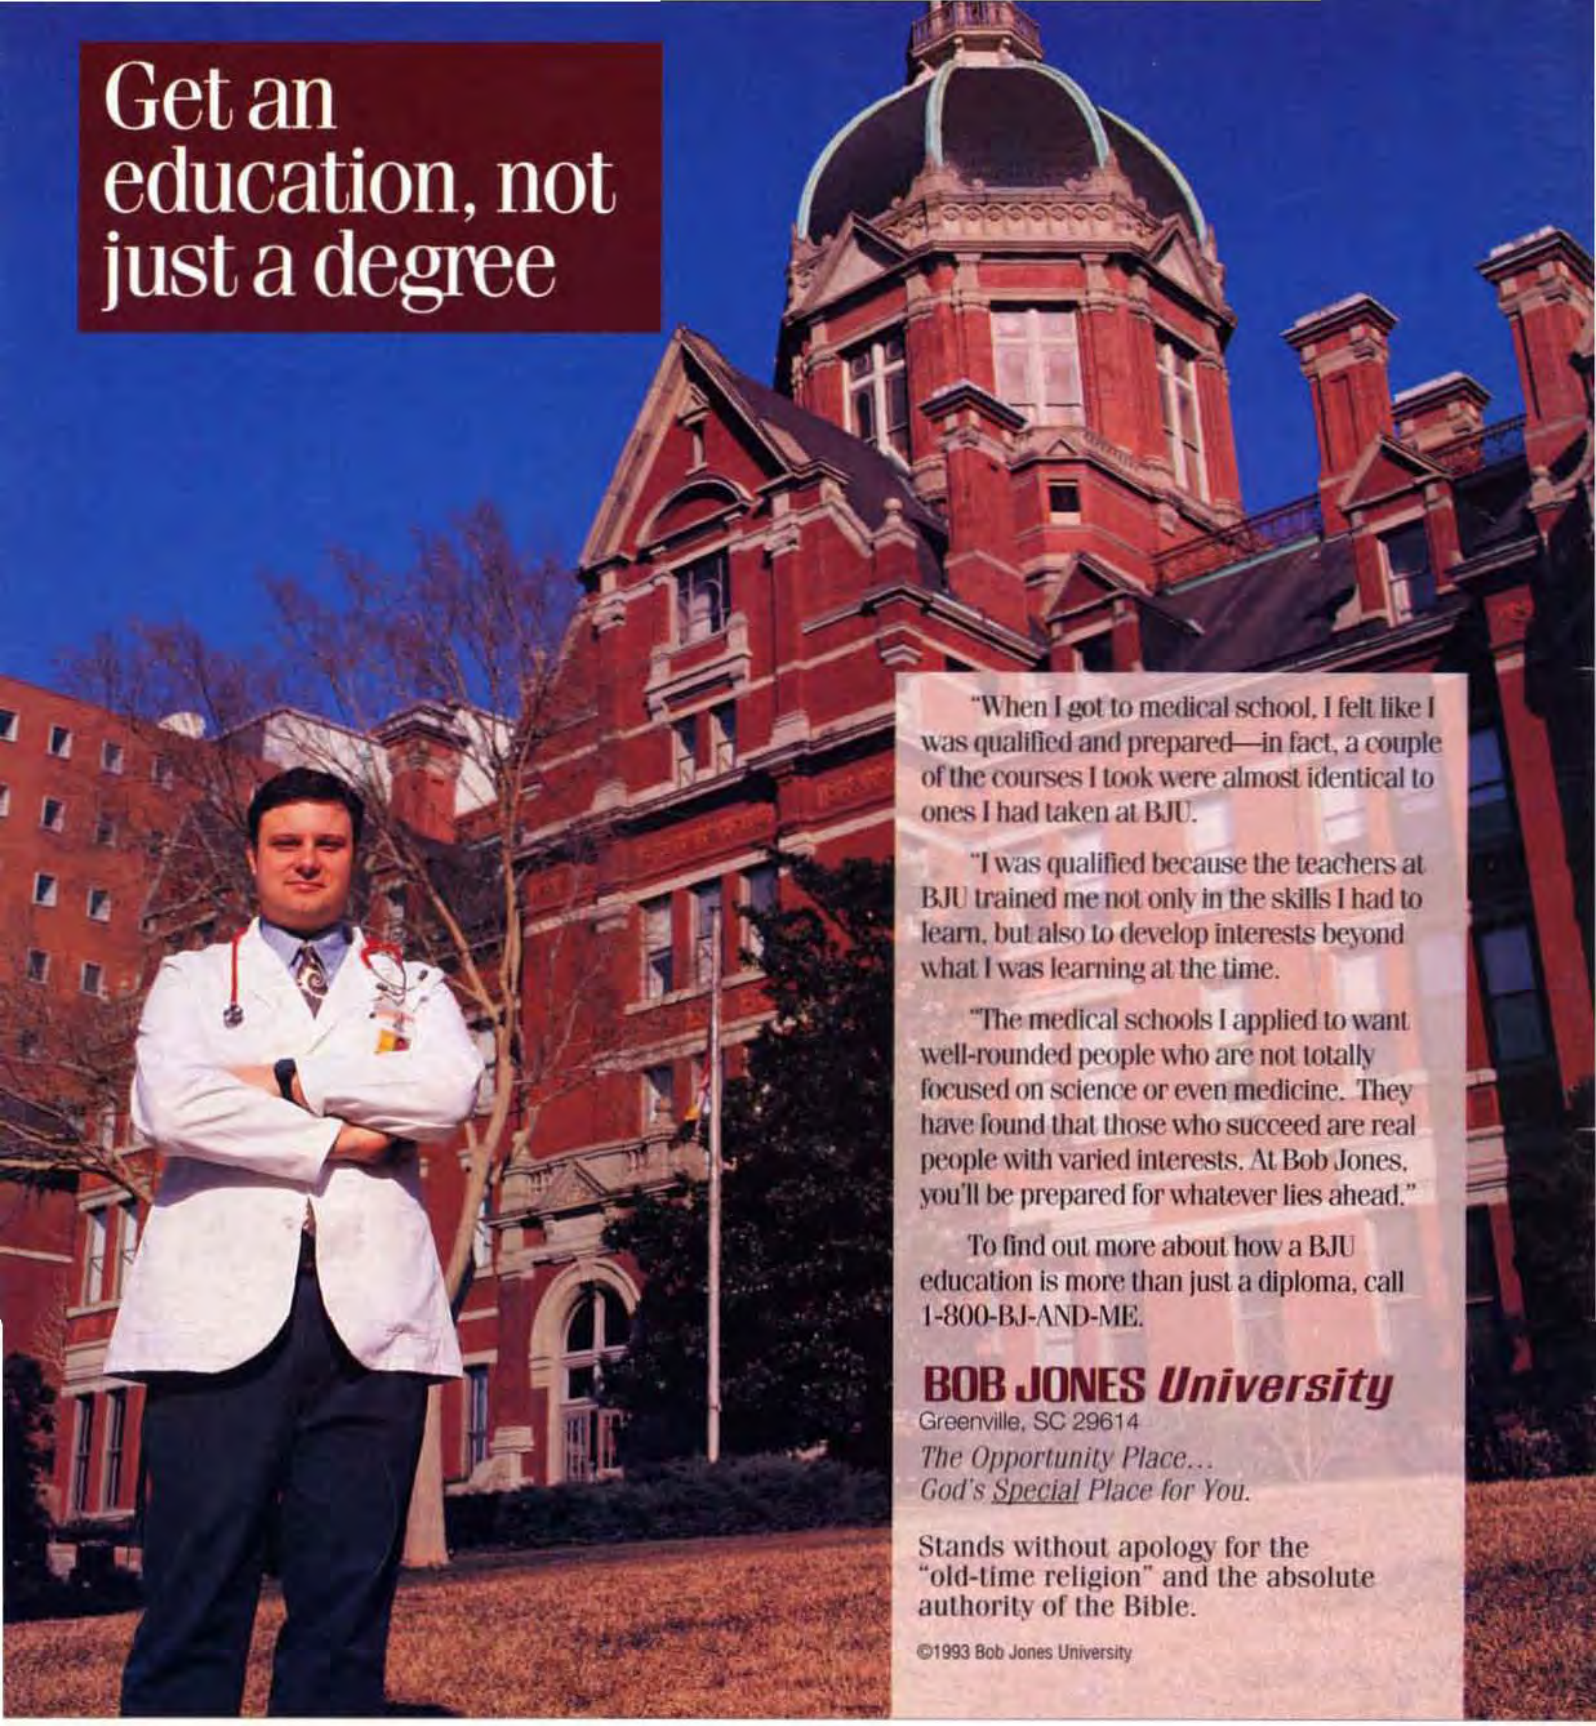
Get an education, not just a degree



"When I got to medical school, I felt like I was qualified and prepared—in fact, a couple of the courses I took were almost identical to ones I had taken at BJU.

"I was qualified because the teachers at BJU trained me not only in the skills I had to learn, but also to develop interests beyond what I was learning at the time.

"The medical schools I applied to want well-rounded people who are not totally focused on science or even medicine. They have found that those who succeed are real people with varied interests. At Bob Jones, you'll be prepared for whatever lies ahead."
